

Children of Incarcerated Parents LIBRARY

www.nrccfi.camden.rutgers.edu

For Caregivers: CIPL 203

What Do Children of Incarcerated Parents and their Caregivers Need?

From Interviews with Caregivers

By Ann Adalist-Estrin

Every child, family, and circumstance is different. Some children are used to parents who were not around much before their incarceration. Some children have parents who are unpredictable because of depression or drugs or alcohol. Other children's parents were actively involved with them before they went to jail or prison.

Some children may have been traumatized by witnessing a violent arrest or may have a history of traumatizing experiences. Some children of incarcerated parents may have no contact with their parent; others talk to their incarcerated parent every day.

Some children move to a new city or state. Some change schools or go into day care so their caregivers can work. Children will need different things from caregivers depending on their age, temperament and personality, the family circumstances, the facts and details of the crime, and the availability of outside resources.

Most Children of Incarcerated Parents Need

- Consistent caring adults who understand that, in general, children love their parents, even when they have committed a crime
- People who will not condemn the incarcerated parents as worthless
- People who will understand that children of incarcerated parents feel angry, sad, confused, and worried
- A chance to express these feelings and learn to cope with them
- A chance to learn and practice skills and keep busy with activities
- Faith or affiliation with a community that can provide meaning for the child beyond their own crisis
- People who can help them to maintain contact with their incarcerated parent or parents or explain to them why they cannot maintain contact

Most Caregivers Need

- Support and understanding from friends, family, clergy, and the community
- Emotional support, such as counseling or group activities
- Information about children of incarcerated parents as well as about services in the community
- Guidance about what is generally best for children and how to answer their questions
- Rules, boundaries, and space in the home: for the children, for the family and for the caregiver
- Opportunities for respite care and relief from the duties of care giving
- Help with managing the needs and services that are all too often fragmented, unavailable, or costly

For information specifically for non-parent caregivers of children of the incarcerated see the Osborne Association's new handbook "Stronger Together" at www.osborneny.org

Children of Incarcerated Parents Library

CIPL 203: What Do Children of Prisoners and their Caregivers Need?

About the Children of Incarcerated Parents Library (CIPL)

Pamphlets may be downloaded without charge from the National Resource Center on Children and Families of the Incarcerated current website:

nrccfi.camden.rutgers.edu.

Duplication is permitted and encouraged, so long as the materials are not altered or sold. Sorry, the NRCCFI is not budgeted to mail free copies. Send comments to the Children of Incarcerated Parents Library at Rutgers University Camden, 405-7 Cooper Street, Room 103, Camden, NJ 08102-1521.

856/225-2718, 856/225-6435 Fax

In Appreciation

The Children of Incarcerated Parents Library was originally supported by a grant from the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation with additional support from the Catholic Campaign for Human Development, the Jack DeLoss Taylor Charitable Trust and the Heidtke Foundation.

Sponsoring organizations also included: Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity, Inc.-Southern Region, Children and Family Networks, Hour Children, The National Practitioners Network for Fathers and Families and The Osborne Association.

Special thanks to the Osborne Association, New York for permission to revise and publish material from their original pamphlets, How Can I Help? For information on Osborne's 2014 Stronger Together Handbooks, go to www.osborneny.org.

The Children of Incarcerated Parents Library was written by Ann Adalist-Estrin, and was edited and published by Jim Mustin. 2014 Edition edited by Dawn Hoffman.

